BOOKSTORE
TRIDENT BOOKSELLERS & CAFÉ
One of the few independent bookshops left in town, Newbury Street’s Trident Booksellers is also a paragon of its genre. Featuring an in-depth selection of best-selling fiction and nonfiction, breakout new authors, guidebooks, and magazines, it’s a wonderful spot in which to hole up for an afternoon, grab a seat and a sandwich in the café, and get lost in a good potboiler or some soul-satisfying poetry. 338 Newbury St., Boston. 617-267-8688; tridentbookcafe.com

FARMERS’ MARKET
CHARLES SQUARE MARKET
Rain or shine, from May till November, farmers from all over New England and hungry buyers from throughout the neighborhood descend on a brick-lined veranda in the corner of Harvard Square. Look for cheeses and homemade candies, conscientiously raised and grass-fed beef and poultry, and produce from area farms like Stillman, Kimball, and Busa. Harvard Square, Bennett and Eliot streets, Cambridge. 617-864-1200; charlesmarket.com

HISTORICAL EXPERIENCE
BOSTON TEA PARTY SHIPS AND MUSEUM
It may be 244 years later, but let’s face it: Reenacting one of the American Revolution’s best-known acts of rebellion just never gets old. On the authentically renovated wooden ships, visitors can soak up the cathartic thrill of dumping tea overboard after a quick history lesson via the holographic displays and films, then peruse the authentic tea chests from the original protest. 306 Congress St., Boston. 866-955-0667; bostonteapartyship.com

MUSIC CAFÉ
CLUB PASSIM
Heroes and legends from Joan Baez to Regina Spektor have graced this stage and sometimes still do, because the place is a legend in its own right. Since 1958 the tiny and friendly Club Passim has been a magnet for folk music and bluegrass lovers, Celtic and a cappella fans, world music and klezmer performers alike. Skip dinner elsewhere, order up a dish and a drink from the kitchen, settle in for the show, and see what the night has to offer. 47 Palmer St., Cambridge. 617-492-7679; passim.org

PUBLIC GARDEN
ARNOLD ARBORETUM
A stroll through this Harvard University-owned, Frederick Law Olmsted–designed landscape is no ordinary walk in the park. This is where you’ll find some of the most rare and majestic trees and plants (all helpfully labeled) in the entire country. They’re spread across verdant meadows, fields, and
